Halloween Pranks Mean No Skating At Frankfort

The Frankfort Village Board is offering a sporting proposition to the young folks of their community. Mayor George Sangmeister advises that the Board has issued a notice relative to Halloween mischief, saying that if the Board is obliged to hire special police to prevent Halloween mischief, the ice skating rink backed up by the Board last winter, will have to be discontinued this winter as the Board does not feel they can stand a double expense so it now remains for the youngsters to choose whether they want to have the fun of an ice skating rink all winter or just a few minutes of Halloween mischief.

New Lenox Camp Grounds Threatened By Chimney Fire

Last Tuesday night a chimney fire on the Cagwin dwelling in the New Lenox Camp Grounds for a few minutes threatened the historic grounds. Prompt help from New Lenox put the blaze out before it had a chance to spread. The dry leaves and dry wooden buildings would have made a serious blaze. The Roy and Rowland Cagwin families are very grateful to those who helped so efficiently in putting the fire out.

STALLED TRUCK CAUSE OF A BAD ACCIDENT

Richard Kohl, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joe Kohl of Mokena, was painfully cut and bruised about the head when his car sideswiped a stranded truck standing on the middle of the pavement at Cicero ave., and 79th street without any warning lights being displayed. The accident occurred early Sunday morning while Mr. Kohl was coming home from work. The weather was foggy and he did not see the stalled truck until he was too near to stop. In trying to swerve around the truck the car sideswiped it and Mr. Kohl was cut and bruised.

The driver of the stalled truck was sound asleep in the cab.

Mr. Kohl's car was badly wrecked while only minor damage was done to the trailer of the truck.

Will Ask Comm. For More Wabash Train Service

Mayors, trustees and civic leaders from ten southwest suburbs with a total population of more than 20,000 will meet Tuesday evening, October 18, to make plans to petition the Illinois Commerce Commission for added train service on the Wabash railroad, which serves most of the communities.

The meeting, called by the Southwest Civic Council, will be held in Palos Heights Community House, 123rd street and Harlem avenue at 8 o'clock.

Also to be considered at the session will be reports on the progress being made to get safety gates and warning lights at the unguarded grade crossing of Ridgeland avenue and the Indiana Harbor Belt Line in Chicago Ridge.

Thomas McKay, president of the council, said scores of protests have been filed with him, charging that present bus transportation is inadequate and should be replaced with maintain regular service.

At present the Wabash railroad, which serves all the towns but Evergreen Park, operates but one train to and from Chicago daily. Most of the commuters depend on bus transportation.

Civic leaders charge that the Illinois Commerce Commission allowed the railroad to curtail its schedule because the bus line had agreed to maintain regular service.

Recently the bus line cut its service to one bus to and from Orland Park.

At one time the Wabash operated seven trains to and from the Dearborn Street station and the various towns along the line.

Communities joining the fight for better transportation are Evergreen Park, Oak Lawn, Columbus Manor, Chicago Ridge, North Oak Lawn, Worth, Palos Park, Palos Heights, Community Center and Orland Park.

Oct. 18, Nov. 1 Registration Days

Last Wednesday evening Donald in company with ten other young folks from Blue Island went to Palos Park on a weenie roast. About nine o'clock in company with a girl from Blue Island went for a motorcycle ride, the girl riding on the back seat of the cycle.

In some unaccountable manner the motorcycle was ditched and the young man was hurled to the pavement sustaining a fractured skull, a broken leg and other injuries while the lady escaped unhurt. The accident occurred at the old Keane avenue road in Palos. Donald's companions brought him to the St. Francis hospital in Blue Island about ten o'clock. Donald was a fine young man and the large funeral attested to the large circle of friends he had in Blue Island.

New Lenox Church To Hold Festival

The Annual Harvest Festival of Grace Episcopal Church, New Lenox will be held Sunday October 16th.

This Festival which dates back to the early middle ages in England has always marked a high point in the Church Year. Amid processions and solemn Te Deums sung by choirs and by the people, the English Church gave thanks for the harvest of the year. The Episcopal Church has always set aside a day for general thanksgiving for the daily bread of man which comes from the soil. It has also been a homecoming for people who have wandered from their early homes to renew old friendships and visit places dear to them.

This year Grace Church will celebrate with a choral Eucharist at 11 o'clock with the Rev. Dr. Paul S. Kramer as the celebrant of the Eucharist with the Vicar of the parish, the Rev. E. M. Ringland, assisting. Dr. Kramer, who is professor of Dogmatic Theology at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary, Evanston, will also be the preacher of the morning.

Following the service in the Church, dinner will be served in Urch Hall in the form of a pot-luck affair to which everyone is more than welcome.

Following the dinner, some of the elder members of the parish will recall some interesting early experiences in the life of the village and of the parish. The Venerable Arch Deacon, N. B. Quigg, Extra-Metropolitan Archdeacon of the Diocese of Chicago, will address the parishoners and guests briefly on the future of the parish and its place in the life of the diocese. The Rev. E. M. Ringland will speak also on his place in the life of the community.

The community at large is invited to participate in this service and fellowship of recognition for the many blessings of the past year. It is an opportunity for the community to show its interest in the work which the parish does and to give its tacit approval to the work of Christ's Church in its midst.

"Herrick's mother," said Elizabeth gently, "was my mother's greatest friend."

"You're not staying with his mother," snapped Old Harry. "By consenting to do as you did, you were playing straight into the hands of father and son. Supposing you'd been discovered . . . Brief would have seen his chance and have flattened you out. He'd have trumpeted the scandal, played the outraged father and ordered his erring daughter out of his sight. 'Never darken my doors again.' And you would have had to go—your cousin would have seen to that. Father fooled, police fooled, Austria fooled. And, ring or no ring, I couldn't have helped you at all. I used to be able to drop a soul-shaking hint, but I've never mastered the art of raising the dead."

There was a little silence, only disturbed by the sleeveless fret of a bee on a window-pane.

At length—

"You must blame me, madam," I said. "That Elizabeth should stay at Raven was my idea."

"Are you proud of it, Richard Exon?"

"No, I'm not," said I. "I'm greatly ashamed."

"Good," said Old Harry. "In future stick to your last. Take action—that's your forte. But never reflect. From what I hear, you have instinct—a precious faculty. Well, be content with that—and drown your ideas at birth. And now take a seat." She touched a chair by her side. As I did her bidding, she turned to Elizabeth. "What were you going to tell me about your mother's jewels?"

Elizabeth recited the facts.

When she had done, Old Harry wrinkled her brows.

"I'm not surprised that your cousin found you de trop. That he's drawn and sold the gems, there can be no doubt. And that by forgery. Now the English are a tolerant lot. They'll overlook treason and fight for a murderer's life, while a healthy theft in England is nearly always worth while. But they've always loathed forgery—probably because they feel that it isn't playing the game. Witness, your poor father . . . Now Cousin Percy has committed that 'loathsome' crime. But yours is the only voice that can send him down. Without you, he can't be arrested, much less arraigned. With you, he is—doomed . . . And so you had to go."

She glanced at a clock.

"Lunch," she said, "will be served in a quarter of an hour. For you two: in the Medici room. After that, you may sit on the terrace until I send. I must think this matter over. I don't want to let you down, but I can't make bricks without straw."

We could not talk freely at table, for never less than three men were constantly in the room. The meal was royally served, and the dishes set before us were fit for a king. All the appointments were flawless, and, ruled by the major-domo, the footmen moved and waited as though their duty had been tirelessly rehearsed.

At these things I shall always wonder, for Elizabeth told me later that months had passed since the Duchess had left her room, while no guests had been entertained for nearly two years. Indeed, I can only submit that they showed forth Old Harry's dominion as nothing else could have done. The palace was out of commission, its mistress was out of sight; and yet, at a nod from her, the machinery sprang to life, to move with all the precision of practiced vigilance.

Coffee was served upon the terrace, above an Italian garden, run to seed. And there we were left to ourselves—and the lizards that stared and darted over the moldering stone.

"She deserves her fame," said Elizabeth. "I know no more than you what line she's going to take; but whatever she does, I haven't wasted my time, because I have seen and talked with 'Harriet the Great.'"

(Here let me say that that surname does her justice as can no periods. A few men and women have borne it, since Time was young. If she had had as fair fields, I have no doubt that she would have borne it, too.)

"I wish," said I, "she was not confined to her bed."

"She isn't," said Elizabeth, swiftly. "She stays there because she likes it. She told me so. She said she had crowded so much into fifty years that she never had time to digest 'the brilliant burden they held.' And now she is doing that. She goes leisurely through her diaries, considering in detail the play which, because she was leading, she never saw."

"And she never gets up?"

"Never. She says that the mental exercise keeps her perfectly fit and the more she rests her body, the clearer her brain becomes."

I felt rather dazed. There were more things at Tracery than were dreamt of in my philosophy.

"Her English," I said, "is better than that of an English Judge."

Elizabeth nodded.

"Her brain's like mercury. When I came in, 'Why you and not Brief?' she said. I gave her the statement at once. She read it through in silence. Then—'I beg your pardon,' she said. 'It seems you are Brief. No need to ask why you're here, but who opened your eyes?' I told her all you had done. 'And here's a man,' she said. 'Don't let him go. I may or may not help you: but such a man's little finger is thicker than my old loins.'"

Before I had time to expose this ridiculous estimate, the major-domo was approaching—to give me the shock of my life.

"By your ladyship's leave, Her Grace will receive Mr. Exon without delay."

Elizabeth smiled and nodded, and, begging her to excuse me, I got to my feet.

"So I'm Going to Treat You as an Equal—the Play's the Thing."

Two minutes later I stood before Old Harry, as a sheep before her shearer's dumb.

The piercing eyes held mine, as a magnet the steel.

"Mr. Exon, I have formed of you a very pleasant opinion, and I am usually right. But I must request your assurance upon one point. That is that you are aware that you cannot possibly marry the Countess of Brief."

The bedroom went black about me, and the blood surged into my face. And I felt as though something had taken me by the throat. Somehow I answered thickly.

"I am well aware of that, madam."

"Good," said Old Harry, agreeably. "I thought as much, but I simply had to be sure. And now come here and sit down, and I'll do the talking until you've got your breath." As I took my seat, her hand went on to my shoulder and held it tight. "Always remember—these things cannot be helped. I loved a commoner once, and he loved me. But there are some bars, Richard Exon, more rigid than those you loosed. So we both of us did our duty. He bowed and went, and I married the Duke of Whelp. And, all things considered, it turned out extremely well . . . And you are the only person to whom I have ever told that—not because no one else would believe me (though that is a fact), but because I have met no other person for whose sake I felt disposed to open an ancient wound."

I believe that I thanked her there, but I cannot be sure. I was like a man sunk in deep water, whose senses are out of hand because his soul is possessed by a frantic instinct to rise. I had harbored no hopes, of course. But, because I was only human, I had made me a dream to play with—a pretty dream. And now, as one takes from a child a toy that may do him harm, the Duchess of Whelp had taken away my dream.

Old Harry was speaking again. "I have no other questions. Fate, that great producer, has cast you for one of the parts in this highly intimate play, and I am far too wise to question her choice. Besides, I think it's a good one—to date you've done very well. So I'm going to treat you as an equal—the play's the thing."

"Elizabeth, as you know, has invoked my help to dispossess her uncle of the birthright which he stole from her father some twenty-one years ago. Her request is a natural one, for it is her bounden duty to do her best to bring this parricide down. But, while I am generally bound to respond to her call, I am not bound to make a fool of myself. If she likes to wish for the moon and comes crying to me, I have every right in the world to send her empty away. Do you agree, or don't you? Not that I care a curse, but I may as well know."

"I agree with you, madam," said I. "The request must be reasonable."

"Very good. What is her request? Not to reach her the moon, but to help her uproot a tree which is more than twenty years old. 'All right,' say I. 'It certainly cumbers the earth and it ought to come down. Where are your tools?' She slapped the quilt with her palm. 'Mr. Exon, she has no tools. And neither have I.'

"For me to move in this matter would be to fail: and for me to fail in this matter would bring me into derision, if not contempt." As I made to protest, she held up a sparkling hand. "I don't expect you to agree. You'd cheerfully sell my soul to buy your pretty darling an first, that any day now Virgil is going to turn into a desperate man; and, secondly, that if you come into collision, you must not expect him to keep to the Queensberry rules. Oh, and one thing more. All that has passed so far is between you and me. Elizabeth is to believe that I have come into this business because I desire to honor my ancestor's bond."

"May I tell Herrick, madam?" Old Harry wrinkled her nose.

Then—

"Yes," she said. "He should be informed. If he resembled his uncle, he wouldn't be 'one of the best.'"

"Lord Naseby dislikes him," I said.

"Ca va sans dire. To find favor in Naseby's eyes, you must be sanctimonious and servile and reap where you have not sown. He demands, but never supplies, and he still has family prayers. But I understand he's failing."

"Herrick gives him another three years."

The Duchess picked up a tablet and made a note.

"I'll have that checked," she said, and laughed at the look on my face. "My agents are paid to find out what I want to know. Some people, when they retire, devote themselves to the study of bygone days: each to his taste, of course, but I've always preferred a live ass to a decomposed lion. For me, the creation took place some sixty years back, and while I respect the ages that went before, the present is the dunghill on which I shall always scratch."

"And now to business."

"Elizabeth must stay here—no doubt about that. You will return to Raven, to fetch her things. Nothing of hers must be left there, and everyone living at Raven must forget her visit as though it had never been. Very well. Tonight I shall write to Brief." She picked up a penciled sheet. "And this is what I shall say:

"I have the pleasure to inform you that the Lady Elizabeth Virgil is now at Tracery, happily none the worse. I am loth to part with her—I wish I had known her before—and since her place is at Brief, she has persuaded me to restore her to you myself. This will entail a visit: but the occasion warrants a breach of the rule I have made, and you may expect us on Tuesday at five o'clock. "I had invited to stay at Tracery a Mr. John Herrick, whose uncle I used to know. He is staying at Raven, by Dever, not far from you. Since I cannot now receive him, I shall be obliged if he and his friend, Mr. Exon, may be invited to Brief for the length of my stay."

"Now I think that will do very well."

"You see, Brief can't refuse to do as I ask: and so we shall all be together within the enemy's camp. Brief will be ill at ease, because he will have to pretend to be the brother I knew. And Virgil won't be at his best, not only for reasons we know, but because to entertain Herrick will undoubtedly shorten his life."

"I've set the stage, Richard Exon: and on Tuesday at five o'clock, the curtain will rise. But I can't give out any parts, because I have none to give. The performance will be improvised, but it shouldn't be dull. And now you be off, young man." I got to my feet. "See your darling first and send her to me. How long will it take you to get to Raven and back?"

"Madam," I said, "I can do it in less than five hours."

The Duchess glanced at a clock, which said it was a quarter past two.

"Then do it in six," she said, "and dine here at half past eight. Bring Mr. Herrick with you."

Old Law Bans the Flying of Kites in Washington; Dueling Also Forbidden

The District of Columbia, national legislative center, has a law forbidding kite-flying and many another strange statute.

Under the law, you can't tie a horse to a tree, and if you use French or Latin during a trial you have to pay your legal opponent $331.33.

The dusty code books do not explain how that figure was agreed upon. Neither do they explain another amount—$26.67, which, if lost in a game of chance, entitles the loser to sue the winner.

The loser not only may sue for the $26.67 or more but can, if he's reasonably lucky, collect three times the amount lost. Some gamblers think it's a fine law. So do District officials, for the city receives half the sum collected in such gifts, according to a Washington United Press correspondent in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Sometimes the lawmakers apparently ignored old statutes when drawing up new measures. A woman has to be twenty-one years old before signing a contract. Yet when she is the beneficiary of a will she reaches her "full, mature or lawful age" at eighteen.

To win title to property by adverse possession, a Washingtonian according to the law books, has to show tax receipts for 15 years—or sometimes for 20 years, depending on which part of the code he is governed by.

Although the district forbids kite-flying, dueling and certain other personal activities, the law permits concerts on the Capitol grounds by "any band in the service of the United States."

The law provides one exception: the band cannot play while congress is in session. The music might disturb the legislators.

Said to Be Smallest Church

A tiny Methodist church, the smallest church in New Zealand, is probably the smallest in the world. It was built by the very early pioneers who landed in the far north of New Zealand in 1850, and settled in the little village which is named Waiti, and is situated about 100 miles north of Auckland. The church is built of Kauri. The tree from which it was built was felled by the pioneers themselves and hand-pit-sawn. It is an octagon in shape, having eight sides, with a shingle roof. It seats 20 persons.

A Slim Waist for Glamour pretty. The fitted-in waistline, the sweep of the full skirt, are too flattering for words! Make it of taffeta, flannel, challis, moire or velveteen—choosing colors that do nice things to your eyes and hair. This pattern is perforated for short length, too.

Daytime Dirndl.

Of course you want a fall-into winter version of the flattering dirndl—and here's the way to make it. With a tailored collar, big buttons down the bodice, Victorian sleeves and (a highlight of charm!) the shirred waistline that looks so delightful on young and supple figures. For this, choose challis, silk print, taffeta or cashmere—preferable in some of the new, rich, warm, lively colorings.

The Patterns.

1498 is designed for sizes 14, 16, 18, 20, 40, 42 and 44. For long coat, size 16 requires 4¾ yards of 39 inch material. For short, 4¼ yards. 1¾ yards grosgrain ribbon to trim.

1617 is designed for sizes 12, 14, 16, 18 and 20. Size 14 requires 3½ yards of 39-inch material. ¾ yard for contrasting collar, if desired. 1¾ yard braid to trim. 1¼ yard ribbon for sash belt.

Fall and Winter Fashion Book.

The new 32-page Fall and Winter Pattern Book which shows photographs of the dresses being worn is now out. (One pattern and the Fall and Winter Pattern Book—25 cents.) You can order the book separately for 15 cents.

Send your order to The Sewing Circle Pattern Dept., Room 1020, 211 W. Wacker Dr., Chicago, Ill. Price of patterns, 15 cents (in coins) each.

Patriotism does not consist in waving banners, or wearing uniforms, or belonging to societies, or denouncing other lands, or waxing eloquent about God's own country. It consists rather in exemplifying in the twentieth century, the ancient truth that "righteousness exalteth a nation; but sin is a reproach to any people."

Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another.

SCOUT NEWS, TROOP 53

By The Little Chief

The Boy Scout circus held at Chicago Heights Athletic field last Saturday evening was well attended by home folks and from all reports, was very much enjoyed. The boys, together with Troop 11 from Matteson made up the bicycle drill which was very well done. They had a splendid opportunity to display their new pup tents in the final company scene when they made a bicycle comp. All in all, the boys had a good time and it being their first experience in that line, it should go a long way toward pepping up the Scout Spirit.

P. T. A. NOTES

A very interesting and well attended meeting of the PTA was held last Friday. A group of little girls from Mrs. Heshols' room, sang a welcome song to our speaker for the afternoon, Mrs. Holland Flager, State Program Chairman, and presented her with a lovely bouquet of flowers, a part of which each of them had been holding while singing. Mrs. Flager responded very graciously and then spoke to us on forming a program.

Sometime the early part of December, we are going to present a minstrel show. More news will be forthcoming.

It has been reported that many of the school children seem to have forgotten the safety rules taught them last semester, especially in regards to riding bicycles on the highways. Mr. Clinebell, our principal, urges the parents to warn their children not to ride more than one on a bicycle or walking more than two abreast on the roads. It has been noticed that three and four walk together and make no effort to get off the road when autos pass by. The school is not responsible for children after they leave the school grounds, so parents, please warn your children to be more careful.

A Lesson For All the World

By RAYMOND PITCAIRN

Recently the civilized world has emerged from the black shadow of a great fear.

It was the fear of war—a war which could have plunged both men and nations into new and terrible agonies of body and of spirit.

From this immediate threat they have, as this is written, been released—perhaps with a sense of grateful wonder at the deliverance.

What has the ordeal taught them?

No one can say. But many will hope that as a result of the experience, both nations and their leaders may look more searchingly into the motives and actions which led them so close to the brink of catastrophe.

Many will hope that out of it may develop a different idea of statesmanship than that which, in recent years, has been tolerated by so much of the world.

They will hope for a cessation of attempts to unleash the twin demons of passion and hatred. They will hope for surcease from the vast and ugly chorus of disparagement which has crowded the air-waves; from efforts to keep whole populations in a mood of irrational anger and hysteria; from endeavors to create bitter antagonisms not only between nation and nation, but between class and class, group and group, within the same borders.

And the people of every land will share that hope. For they know that the average man and worker still prefers the plowshare to the sword, the measured word to the violent phrase. They know that long after today's most provocative wise-crack has been forgotten, the world will remember the words of him who spoke with malice toward none, with charity for all.

For today the people of all lands have seen the grave dangers to which the constant preaching of hatreds, the modern obsession for violent phrase-making, can lead. And they have seen what calm thinking and sincere statement can do to save humanity from the catastrophe that constitutes an inevitable climax to all hymns of hate. They have been reminded anew that "peace begins just where ambition ends."

If the world, and its statesmen, have learned this lesson—then the cloud through which we have just passed will show a silver lining.

Midget Auto Races At Raceway Park Sunday Afternoons

Midget auto racing at Raceway Park, 129th St., and Ashland Ave., just south of Chicago, will be switched to Sunday afternoons instead of Saturday nights beginning Sunday, October 16, when the first time trials start at 1:30 p. m. and the first race begins at 1:30. Scheduled Sunday will be a 40 lap race.

The switch allows time for several topnotchers who have been racing elsewhere to get to Raceway. Another factor is the colder nights which were bound shortly to thin out the crowd.

Racing Director Edw. Rippe, says Wally Zale and Harry MacQuinn will be back and Art Harstfelt, there for the first time last week, will be on hand again as will Ted Tetterton, Miwe O'Halloran and the rest of the boys.

In an evening marked with crashes, spins and thrills another capacity crowd Saturday night saw Mike O'Halloran streak to victory in the 25 lap main event. It was the youthful son of Erin's first feature win. Hard pressed throughout the encounter by Marshall Lewis, O'Halloran managed to drive his white number seven to victory. Ted Tetterton hit the wall on the 19th lap. His machine leaped the guard rail and tumbled on a cable. Lewis and O'Halloran were side by side for the last 11 laps. The finish of the race was as follows: O'Halloran, Lewis, Myron, Fohr, Johnny Zale and Ted Johnson. Time 7:45:10.

Art Harstfelt, the Toledo flash, made his first appearance Saturday. He did not drive his fast outboard job but used the machine he entered in the recent Detroit meet.

Bill Smith, Bunny Beaver and Ken York fought it out in the consolation event. Smith and Beaver jump into the lead and stayed there thru-out but York came from 9th to place in the money. Christ Wiley spun and hit the wall but was unhurt. Winners were Smith, Beaver and York. Time 3:11:32. Wiley had skidded in the second heat race too, hitting the southwest board fence that time.

Appear In Non-
Political Program

Swinging into the home stretch of the fall political campaign the nominees on the state ticket of the Democratic party, touring downstate in two caravans, were heard last week by larger and more enthusiastic crowds.

Scott W. Lucas, nominee for United States Senator, addressed two huge rallies. The first of these, at Knox college, Galesburg, was a celebration of the eightieth anniversary of one of the famous Lincoln-Douglas debates. Mr. Lucas and his Republican opponent appeared together and gave non-political addresses.

At the end of the week Lucas was honored by his home town friends and neighbors at Havana at one of the biggest rallies and demonstrations of the campaign thus far. In addition to almost the entire population of Havana, hundreds of his friends and supporters from counties of the 20th Congressional district swelled the throng. The celebration included a band concert and parade.

The Lucas caravan turned northward last week into the extreme northwestern counties of the state. At Kewanee the Democratic senatorial nominee repeated his pledge to work in the United States senate for passage of an excise tax on blackstrap molasses and other imports which compete with the industrial use of corn.

"Under no circumstances," he said, "am I in favor of a high tariff. It was the Hawley Smoot sky high tariff act which, to a large measure, was responsible for the depression of 1932."

"However, when a condition exists wherein the American farmer could obtain a market which is now closed to him because of the import of tropical products duty free, I am going to vote—as I always have voted—in favor of the American farmer."

Early English Pipes

The first English pipes were made of silver, wood, or porcelain, some of the latter being beautifully painted and now very valuable. Instead of a lighter, the Elizabethan gentleman carried a little pair of bronze or silver tongs for picking a live coal out of the fire to light his pipe. The clay pipe, which soon became the most popular form of all, was introduced from Holland, and the long "church-wardens," were provided in all the London coffee-houses. In the Eighteenth century, says London Answers Magazine, pipe-smoking went completely out of fashion in London society, where the dandies considered snuff-taking much more elegant than smoking. The working classes, however, still remained faithful to their clays.

Bugle Calls

Seventeen minutes after the deal was made in Munich by the four powers giving Mr. Hitler parts of Czechoslovakia which he demanded, an announcer for an American broadcasting system had the copy of the agreement in hand at a microphone, and we at our radios had the news.

To my mind this marks the turning point in the role of the metropolitan press as a fast transmitter of news via the printed page, today radio takes honors of speedy delivery.

This should turn the minds of the big city editors again to the possibilities of the editorial page. Horace Greeley's New York Tribune; Marse H. Watterson's Louisiana Courier-Journal; Colonel William Nelson's Kansas City Star and Clark Howell's Atlanta Constitution were the leading newspapers of their day because their editors had the courage on the editorial pages to attack evil conditions.

Then along came the consolidations, the stock selling schemes, and papers were merged with each other for the sake of economy and larger profits. The old time editors passed on. In Kansas City today an evil dose of corrupt politics has plagued the town. Yes, we again need strong men like Colonial William Nelson to head a paper to fight graft.

The boys on the big city press for years have laughed at us in the country because we print such items as Sarah Jones was a Hickville visitor. Unless it is a murder, it isn't news to them. Now the laugh is on them. The radio beats them to the draw on rapid transmission of news. Let them again do some spade work on their editorial page; their towns need it.

Are you hating someone? Then stop hating that party. Hate is a losing game for the one who does the hating. Stop and think, you can not remake that person, and perhaps if you could you might do a worse job. Because he or she is what he or she is, it was done; the best way out is to forgive.

YOUR HEALTH

"Nations, like men, can be healthy and happy, though comparatively poor. . . . Wealth is a means to an end, not the end itself. . . . Substitute health and a happiness for wealth as a world-ideal; and translate that new ideal into action by education from babyhood up." — by John Galsworthy.

ZEB'S HAT IS OFF

To the man who has been honest who has served faithfully on a school board with interest in his task, who believed that the children's interests were first, and not his pocket-book, no matter if that school was just one room at the cross roads; Zeb Potter takes his hat off to that man. Next week folks, watch this column to see to whom Zeb takes off his hat. That's all this week.

"Something is Wrong"

The campaign of Goodwin L. Dosland, lawyer and trained drafter of statutes, and E. A. Kelly, seasoned politician, real estate, and long-time adherent of the Kelly-Nash Organization and the New Deal, presents something new in political annals to the people of the Third Congressional District.

Dosland is a political newcomer. He admits that the New Deal seemed to suggest possible solutions for problems of Illinois and the United States, but calls attention to the fact that the problems remain as serious as ever after six years.

"Something is wrong," Dosland is pointing out as he talks to the voters throughout the district, which includes parts of the Third, Ninth, Thirteenth, Fourteenth, Fifteenth, Seventeenth and Nineteenth wards and all of the Southern townships of Cook county.

"The attempts of the New Deal to socialize industry and agriculture and to gain control of communications in the United States have met with only partial success, and the result has not been reassuring," he said at meetings at 59th and Campbell and in Beverly Hills. He also spoke at Chicago Heights and Harvey on Saturday, when Richard J. Lyons, Republican senatorial candidate was principal speaker.

"The crying need for business recovery and for jobs for the workers has been overlooked or made secondary to experiments and reforms which might have come later. We have a payroll government, a government to destroy business and enslave the people."

"In this district they have spent $1,250,000 in the last two months to defeat me. If they spent $10,

Applications For Drivers License Have Been Issued

Secretary of State Edw. J. Hughes has sent out the following instructions relative to making application for operators licenses under the new Driver's License Law:

1. It is important that every question asked on an operator's license application be answered fully, as the Secretary of State must determine from these answers whether an examination is necessary. Failure to answer one question will necessitate the immediate return of the application.
2. No operator's license application may be accepted if forwarded with any other type of application under one check. (For example: an application for plates or title could not be forwarded under one check with an operator's license application.) This ruling does not prohibit a family from sending more than one operator's license application under one check, draft or money order.
3. Operator's and chauffeur's applications should be mailed to the following address: Operator's and Chauffeurs' Division, Edw. J. Hughes Secretary of State, State Capitol building, Springfield. Special return envelopes are supplied by that office for forwarding the operator's license applications.

For the applicant's protection and convenience, the applicant is being asked to forward with his application a picture of himself, size 1" x 1 1/2". This picture will appear on his license and will protect him in case of loss against use of the license by any other person. It will also aid him in cashing checks, etc. In every instance applicant must sign his full name on back of photograph.

5. Do not send currency or stamps. Stamps will not be accepted and this office will assume no responsibility for the loss of currency.

6. The upper portion of the application should be printed, or type-written if possible. If printed, black ink should be used. All signatures, however, must be personally written by the applicant.

7. The fee for an operator's license for any individual over 18 years of age is 50 cents. This first license expires May 1, 1942. The fee for a license of a minor between the ages of 15 and 18 is 25 cents for that period. The application of a minor must be accompanied by the written consent of one of his parents.

8. Applications may be filed personally at the Springfield office in the State House, or at the Chicago office, 120 South Ashland Ave., Chicago. The temporary instruction permit, temporary permit, junior operator's license and regular operator's license are procured by executing the one operator's application.

9. Advise applicants not to expect their operator's license as soon as they would their plates or titles. This is a new department unable to employ a sufficient number of people and these applications will receive as prompt attention as is possible. Three weeks' service seems to be sufficient at the present, inasmuch as the deadline for procurement of these licenses is May 1, 1939.

Country Town Assessors Endorse John S. Clark

Sweeping aside differences in political affiliation, the assessors of the 30 townships in Cook County outside Chicago, unanimously endorsed John S. Clark for a second term as assessor of Cook County.

This tribute to Assessor Clark was made in a resolution passed by the Country Towns Assessors' Assn. of Cook County, of which Harry L. Brundage, assessor of Riverside Township is president and D. W. Jellema, assessor of Calumet township, is secretary. The township assessors are elected by the voters in the townships, with one exception. Evanston's township assessor is appointed by the county assessor.

After paying tribute to the cooperation and harmonious relationship with Assessor Clark, the township assessors asserted that "honesty, ability, fairness, efficiency and cooperation in public office should be recognized and rewarded."

It was resolved that "this Association and the Members thereof acting regardless of political affiliation but in recognition of a civic duty endorse the candidacy of the Hon. John S. Clark for re-election to the office of County Assessor and urge his re-election on November 8th."

"That this Association and the members thereof use all proper means to advise the voters of Cook County of the splendid record made by the said John S. Clark during his present term of office and of the unusual and superior qualifications of the said John S. Clark for said office."

Duck Hunting Season Opens This Saturday

When the duck season opens Saturday morning thousands of hunters will be looking for mallards, wildgeons and pintails. But two Illinois Natural History Survey duck experts will be looking for duck gizzards and tail feathers.

The reason for this strange quest is explained by Dr. T. H. Frison, Frison, Survey chief, who has assigned Arthur S. Hawkins and Frank C. Bellrose Jr., game technicians, to the Illinois River for the period of the duck season.

Duck gizzards, says Dr. Frison, thousands of them, are needed by Hawkins and Bellrose for a study ways of increasing duck food in the the Survey is making to determine Illinois River valley.

The tail feathers, plus a wing and foot of each of thousands of these birds, are needed in the Survey census work. With each set of feathers, the Survey wants information as to the sex and kind of duck and the area in which it was shot. It also wants from each hunter willing to cooperate information on the number of ducks shot or crippled and not brought to bag.

"This is the kind of information which is needed before sound duck management can be practiced", Hawkins says. "It is also the kind of information which can be obtained only thru the complete cooperation of duck hunters."

Hawkins hopes that the study he and Bellrose are making will answer a number of questions of interest to hunters.

"For every 100 mallards which fly north in the spring", he asks, "how many, including offsprings, fly south in the fall to provide sport for the duck hunter? How many of those that return are bagged or crippled by hunters, and how many does that leave next spring? In short, how many mallards can be harvested while still leaving enough for breeding stock?"

Hawkins explains that the whole gizzards may be preserved in quart jars partially filled with a solution of 5 percent formaldehyde. The gizzards for different kinds of ducks and for those shot in different areas should be kept separate.

Several large hunting clubs along the Illinois River have already expressed a willingness to cooperate with the Natural History Survey in its studies. Dr. Frison says. He adds that individual hunters willing to cooperate may obtain necessary information by addressing the Illinois Natural History Survey at Urbana.

Hitler, Germany's Man of Mystery, Founded His Success on Psychology

Czech Crisis Presented First Test of 'Bluff' Game That Won Him Power Over Reich.

By JOSEPH W. LABINE

The greatest mystery of our modern times is Adolf Hitler, who feels within himself a god-like mandate to guide Germany's destiny. Perhaps that very mystery is what gives him strength, for men have always stood in awe of that which they cannot understand.

Behind the mustache and frowning eyes lies a mind that is both brilliant and irrational. Adolf Hitler is at once a master of other men and a slave to himself. He is an inveterate brooder, and though brooders seldom have power over other men, Der Fuehrer is master of the Reich.

He is a bluffer who has stubbornly waved a two-edged sword at world democracy, refusing to give an inch because dictators cannot afford to change their minds.

But it cannot be said that Hitler's power has gone to his head, for he demonstrated this same stubbornness long before the Munich beer-cellar putsch, long before the late President von Hindenburg grudgingly made him chancellor.

To know the man you must follow his growth, a story in whose every chapter is a trace of the bitterness that can only come from misguided genius. It is the story of a potential giant who stumbled through his early years, groping desperately for an anchor.

Austrian by Birth

His ancestral home is Spittal, Austria, once on the frontier, where poverty and inbreeding have long been the peasants' tragedy. His father was Alois Schickelgruber-Hitler, a strong-willed cobbler whose first wife brought him money, whose second wife died shortly after her marriage, and whose third wife was the first Mrs. Hitler's housemaid. It was to this third wife that the child Adolf was born, a weak, sensitive child who disliked his father, and who probably learned to brood through this same dislike.

He lived within himself, so much that his former playmates have pictured him standing on a hillside at night, bawling a political speech at two fruit trees while school chums giggled in the nearby bushes. He was expelled from school for smoking, a strange trick in view of the adult Adolf Hitler's strict abstinence.

And it was at Vienna, when 17, that the future Reichsfuehrer first felt life's reality. Twice forced admission to an art school, forced to earn his bread and beer by painting houses and hanging paper, he suffered for five years the agonies of a man who feels himself unwanted by society. But this bitterness was enough to set him thinking. In "Mein Kampf," the autobiography he was to write later while sulking in a German prison, he attempts frantically to explain the Vienna failure by heaping scorn on the effete Hapsburgs, on Jewish capitalists and unpatriotic Socialists.

In 1912 he left Vienna for Munich, turning his back on the Austria he was destined one day to rule. In the world war he served four years, mostly as an orderly carrying messages. Comrades describe him as a recluse who loved war and boasted how he would conduct Germany's offensive. The comrades laughed and called Adolf Hitler "ein Spinner," which is Bavarian dialect for one who is cracked.

Shortly before the armistice, on October 14, 1918, he was gassed and taken to the hospital. There, while peace was signed, while Germany suffered degradation, he closed his eyes and remained blind three months. A psychologist has said he took refuge in blindness, a nervous reaction in which he did not allow himself to see Germany's shame.

Finds His Tongue

Peace brought Socialists, Communists and reactionaries to Germany, men who loved to orate from soap boxes. In such an electrified element Hitler found his tongue, developed oratorical tricks and learned to control his audience like a magician. The bitterness of youth was giving way to the vengeful spirit of manhood. Adolf Hitler was on his way, planning craftily like a press agent for the build-up that would eventually bring him to power.

From Austria's ancient national socialism he took the swastika, a good luck sign of antiquity. From his party, the "workers national socialist" group, he took the initials, which, in German, spelled "Nazi." From Mussolini, who was about to "march" on Rome in a Pullman car, he borrowed the "shirt" idea because he knew Germans loved uniforms. His program, aimed at the nebulous objective of building a great nation, had as its cardinal principles the ousting of Jews, repudiation of war guilt, reparations and the Versailles treaty.

His stronghold was Munich, and there he began drawing huge crowds at speeches delivered wherever there was an audience, usually in beer cellars. Thus came the famous beer cellar putsch, an almost-fatal blunder through which he sought a short cut to power.

Leading 2,000 Nazis, he swung into the square fronting Munich's historic Feldherrenhalle, where local police killed 14 of his followers. But the dynamics of Hitlerism had taken effect. Sentenced to five years in prison, he was released six months later by a warden who whispered: "Herr Hitler, you have made a Nazi out of me."

Naziism to Power

That was in 1924, and the next six years found Germany prospering, then succumbing to depression. Far from defeated, though still brooding, Hitler had realized his Munich blunder and was building a stronger party. On the night of September 14, 1930, the world gasped to learn he had won 107 deputies in the Reichstag election, placing the Nazi party second in power. Two years later he was reluctantly made chancellor by President von Hindenburg and the conquest was complete.

All but one thing. Naziism's rise had produced faithless followers, one of them Ernst Roehm. On June 30, 1934, he and at least 70 others were quietly liquidated and the world knew Adolf Hitler was supreme in Germany.

Why? Is it his remarkable gift of oratory, his personality, his program—or fear? Is it Germany's appreciation of the Fuehrer who has led them confidently from one conquest to another?

Probably a combination of these qualities, but behind them all is the most important secret: Adolf Hitler is a master psychologist. He threw over the Versailles treaty and walked into the Rhineland when Great Britain and France were busy watching Premier Mussolini's conquest of Ethiopia. He took possession of Austria when Britain and France were busy with internal strife. His game of foreign conquest has been a continuous bluff, until it seemed certain that no power would challenge his occupation of Czechoslovakia.

He was mistaken there, but the bluff continued with amazing success. He turned down repeated offers of peaceful settlement, confident that Britain and France would eventually capitulate. When they refused, he caused a war scare that threw all Europe into a turmoil. At the last moment, when there seemed no way to avoid armed conflict, he summoned a meeting of powers to discuss a peaceful settlement. History will say he won again.

Psychology Triumphant

He uses psychology in oratory, knowing that emotion is a stronger appeal than common sense. The words come in torrents, at first high-pitched, then intense, then breaking into a sob.

He uses psychology in showmanship. At the recent Munich party congress he kept the air charged with constant expectation. Soldiers marched and bands blared. Loud-speakers announced Der Fuehrer's every movement as he left the hotel, began driving to the stadium and began mounting the platform. Here was a show to bring tears of pride to any Nazi's eyes.

He uses psychology in his program. Though Germans work hard and have little to show for it, the hazy promise of a greater Reich hangs constantly before their eyes. By girding his nation for war, Der Fuehrer has reduced unemployment and busy people seldom complain, especially when the world's greatest propaganda machine directs their thought and effort.

Lastly, he uses psychology in selling his personality. To Germany, Adolf Hitler is a man of mystery, strong-chinned giant who once told them: "You are mine and I am yours, as long as I shall live!"

It Must Be Admitted Waiter Was Not Tactful

The customer was raging and fuming as the manager came up. "What is the matter, sir?" asked the manager.

"Discharge that waiter at once!" demanded the diner.

Regarding the boiled egg which had been served, the manager said:

"I'm very sorry about this egg, sir, but I can't discharge the waiter for that. After all, he wasn't to know that there was a chicken in it."

"Perhaps not," snapped the customer. "But when I told him there was, he needn't have taken away my spoon and brought me a knife and fork."

Norse Seamen

Hardy, indeed, are Norway's seamen. Though Norway ranks but forty-seventh in population among the major nations, her merchant marine is fourth largest in the world. Since the days of the Vikings, Norwegian seamen have specialized in long ocean trips. Even today they carry most of the cargoes from America's Gulf states to Europe.

In the days of sailing ships, too, Norwegian skippers began taking their families to sea because ocean voyages took many months. The sailors' superstition that women are bad luck to a ship, never bothered them.

'Hill-Climbing' Boats

A unique steamship service operates between the East Prussian towns of Elbing and Deutsch Eylau, a distance of 40 miles. Part of the trip is made on a canal and part on a railroad, whose specially designed trucks pick up the little vessels and quickly carry them over four long hills. These "hill-climbing boats" have rendered unnecessary the construction of 20 locks.—Collier's Weekly.

CARTER FIELD

Carter Field discusses the political outlook . . . He finds Republicans have lost Negro vote which gave them edge in several states . . . Roosevelt expects big advantage in having friendly chairman of the house rules committee.

WASHINGTON.—"Herbert Hoover said, in the spring of 1932, that there was one more victory in prohibition," said a shrewd Republican leader in discussing the present prospects of the Republican party. "He knew there was only one, because he had seen, in the primaries and elections in 1930, that the tide had turned. What he did not see was how fast it was running."

"Some of my friends think they see one more victory for the Republican party in the very obvious cleavage among the Democrats as perfectly illustrated in the purge primaries. Maybe they are right, but maybe they are making the same mistake that Hoover made—underestimating the speed of the tide."

"But," a friend of this leader commented, "some folks think the purge primaries and some of the polls showing that while Roosevelt is still popular he is not as strong as he was prove that the tide is now running the other way."

"I am talking about the tide which has been ebbing for the Republican party since 1928," the first retorted. "Certainly I think the New Deal is less popular. Certainly I think it is running slowly against Roosevelt. But it is not running in a direction that will sweep the Republican party back to its once dominant position in this country."

"What most people overlook is that we have lost the Negro vote, and apparently lost it for good. A very casual study of election figures for the entire period from the close of the Civil war until 1932 will disclose that the Republicans would not have won a single election in all those years had the Negro vote been cast as solidly Democratic as it was Republican."

"It has been generally realized, though not much talked about, that the Negroes held the balance of power in New York, New Jersey, Indiana, Ohio and Illinois. Actually it is much more potent than that. Once you measure the effect of the switch of a solid bloc of votes from one side to the other, it is apparent that many other states, with much smaller proportions of Negro population, are affected."

Republicans, Conservative; Democrats, More Liberal

"Meanwhile our old full dinner-pail appeal, so potentially used in behalf of McKinley, has vanished. Once we were the high tariff party and Democratic success seemed a threat against the wages of every industrial employee. That day is gone for ever. At present the nearest one can come to defining the difference between the Republican and Democratic parties is that the Republican is more conservative, the Democrat more liberal."

"But that is a lineup which means murder to the Republicans, because the conservative—from that standpoint—section of the country is that lying below the Mason and Dixon line, from Maryland to Texas. And without some religious or other very disturbing issue we normally do not have a Chinaman's chance in any of those states."

"Of course, if the Democrats should split at their next convention and put up two tickets, one conservative and one New Deal, we might have a chance. That would be an excellent thing for some Republicans who would like to have important-sounding jobs. They might have them. But not for long."

"That is, they would have them unless the tide against the Republicans is running as fast as that against prohibition was in 1932, when Mr. Hoover made such a bad mistake that he would not even take Mable Walker Willebrandt's advice to 'come out for beer.'"

"If it's running that fast, the Republican party might be a poor third in the next election."

Conflict Between Two Groups of Republicans

Controversy about the candidacy of John J. O'Connor, chairman of the house rules committee who was recently defeated for renomination in President Roosevelt's first "purge" victory, has brought out a curious conflict between two groups of Republicans. Perhaps it would be more accurate to say two groups who had been Republicans. Or to say between the Republicans and a group of former Republicans.

The point is that those who hope to see the Republican party restored to its former grandeur in power at Washington, Albany and Harrisburg, seem for the most part to be distressed over the fact that so many Republicans in the Sixteenth New York district voted to nominate as their candidate for congress O'Connor, whom they regard as a discarded Democratic hack.

But some of the former Republicans, who are just as bitterly anti-New Deal as their former colleagues, glory in O'Connor's candidacy, and are hoping he will be elected. This group has no particular affection for O'Connor. Had it not been for the "purge" they would have cared nothing about his defeat. They agree heartily with most folks who know something about the Sixteenth district that it was the fact that O'Connor had "gone high hat" on his old friends which defeated him.

Only Hope Seems to Be Triumph Over New Dealism

The real difference between these two groups of anti-New Dealers is that one of them hopes to defeat Roosevelt and all his works by the triumph of the Republican party. The other has no hope that there is anything left of the Republican party which can possibly overthrow the New Deal. Their only hope, not as would-be office-holders and sitters in the seats of the mighty, but as patriotic Americans, as they see it, is the triumph over New Dealism by the conservative Democrats, and eventually the creation of new parties.

Strengthening of the Republican party now does not, as the dissenting group sees it, help in this program. On the contrary it retards it. Worse than that, it tends, again according to this viewpoint, to perpetuate the New Deal.

On the other hand, if the Democrats engage in a knockdown and drag out fight at their convention when it comes to choosing Mr. Roosevelt's successor, there is the distinct prospect that there will be a party split.

Advantage in Having Friendly Rules Chairman

There is no discounting the tremendous advantage President Roosevelt expects in having a friendly chairman of the house rules committee—and probably a friend instead of a "Yes, but" Democrat in place of Rep. William J. Driver of Arkansas, who was defeated in an upset in which national leaders had not even thought of the word "purge."

But the further assumption that the President will have more of his own way in the next two years on Capitol Hill is very violent indeed. In the first place, there will be more Republicans in the house. How many? Nobody knows, but it will scarcely be less than 40 more, and it is more likely to run up to about 70.

Assuming the minimum, there will be 40 Republicans sitting in seats which in the last house were occupied by Democrats. Further, the probability is that most of the 40 changes will displace pro-New Deal Democrats rather than "Yes, but" Democrats. The answer to that is simple. The vast majority of the "Yes, but" Democrats were from the South. In the senatorial purge the big drive was concentrated against three of the nine senators who opposed the President on the Supreme court issue. This big drive was below the Mason and Dixon line—in Maryland, South Carolina and Georgia. No real effort was made in Connecticut, or Missouri, or Nevada, or Colorado. The President himself did not speak about the Iowa primary, though his son James did.

By the same token the representatives friendly to the insurgent senators are from the South. Most of the northern and western Democrats were inclined to go along with the President. John J. O'Connor, of New York, was exceptional in this respect. Perhaps that is why he was singled out for attack. Perhaps that is why the attack succeeded.

Insurgent House Members Mostly From the South

The importance of the fact that most of the insurgent house members are in the South, and most of the hundred per-centers are in the North and West, is that it is the two latter classes who are in danger from Republican opponents. No one, not even John D. M. Hamilton, is predicting Republican gains in the house from the South.

In fact, the three banner states in the list where the Republicans expect gains are Illinois, Pennsylvania and Ohio.

In addition three "hundred per cent" New Deal members were replaced in Texas alone in the primaries by "Yes, but" Democrats, Maury Maverick being the only one of the three whose name means anything nationally. Norman R. Hamilton, of the second Virginia district, was beaten by a man loyal to the Harry F. Byrd machine.

But even more important is the obvious effect on southern Democrats of the primaries in which the President failed to displace southern senators. The members who come back to the house will know that it is not certain political death to be put on the President's black list. They know that it is not certain re-election to follow him 100 per cent. So they will use their own judgment as to the politically safe way for them to vote on any given issue.

Lesson for October 16

REVERENCE FOR GOD

LESSON TEXT—Exodus 20:7; Matthew 5:33-37; 12:33-37.
GOLDEN TEXT—Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name.—Matthew 6:9.

Character reveals itself through the words and deeds of a man. He may try to conceal his real spiritual condition and may assume an outward appearance of piety but he need not say many words, nor meet many of life's problems, before his true condition is revealed.

Our lesson for today touches primarily on the matter of the words of men, presenting first God's command that in speaking we are to show reverence for His name, and then leading up to the expression of that reverence in abstinence from swearing and from idle talk.

I. Reverence Commanded (Exod. 20:7).

The forbidden thing is the taking of the name of the Lord "in vain." Our use of the word "vain" carries the meaning of "useless, without purpose or meaning." This is part of what is in mind in this commandment, for the name of Jehovah is sacred and is to be revered as standing for the eternal God. It is never to be used carelessly, or for a frivolous purpose. All too often we tell jokes or stories which have no real purpose or meaning except to elicit a laugh and in them we use the name of God. We all need to exercise care at that point.

The Hebrew word translated "vain" has the additional meaning of "evil" and "falsehood." Men are so bold that they may even use the name of God to support themselves in a lie. God hears and will in no wise hold them guiltless.

II. Swearing Forbidden (Matt. 5:33-37).

The Sermon on the Mount (so-called, from which this portion of Scripture is taken, is difficult to interpret to the satisfaction of all. Some disregard its evident application to the kingdom and, attempting to apply it in the midst of an ungodly generation, fall into such inconsistency that they abandon the effort and regard the teaching of the passage as impossible idealism. Others, who rightly interpret the passage as presenting the laws and principles of life in the kingdom of God when it shall be fully set up on earth with Jesus as King, fail to make any application of those principles to the life of those who are now living in this world—though not of it—but rather have their citizenship in heaven. This is also an unfortunate error.

We who follow the Lord Jesus are not to swear by either things sacred or things that might be called secular. Perhaps He has in mind that our lives should be so true that men will not need to have any kind of an oath to be assured of our sincerity and honesty. Some believe that all oaths even in court are forbidden, while others, with due respect for the feelings of those who hold this view, regard the taking of oaths in official matters as not being in mind. All would agree that the careless and almost sacrilegious use of God's name in administering oaths would be taking His name in vain.

Swearing is also entirely beyond the pale with Christian men and women. It is all too common with both men and women. A great church has organized a "Holy Name Society" to keep its members from using the name of the Lord in profanity. What a telling comment on the times in which we live!

III. Judgment Assured (Matt. 12:33-37).

Jesus had cast out a demon who had possessed a man and made him blind and dumb. The Pharisees could not deny the miracle but attributed it to the power of Beelzebub, prince of the demons. Jesus closed their mouths by pointing out that Satan did not work against himself, and went on to speak solemn words regarding their and our responsibility for what we say.

A day of judgment is coming, when we shall answer for the idle and wicked words which we speak. While we would not bring condemnation upon those who indulge in the innocent pleasantries of life by making too severe an application of these words, neither should we destroy their evident import by failing to apply them to our daily conversation. One need but listen to the casual small talk of men and women in public places to realize that we need to give attention to the matter of elevating not only the conversation of others but our own as well to a nobler and more helpful level. Surely Christians should speak for the glory of God on every occasion and in each circumstance of life.

The way to accomplish this worthy purpose, and the only way, is to have the heart and life filled with the good treasure of God's Word, for verily out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. What do your words and mine indicate to others regarding what is in our hearts?

What to Eat and Why

C. Houston Goudiss Discusses Significance of Fruits and Vegetables; Tells the Truth About Canned Foods

By C. HOUSTON GOUDISS

A GENERATION ago, except in mid-summer, fruits were a luxury that only appeared, with nuts, at the end of a festive meal, and vegetables, except for the root crops, had no regular place in the daily diet. But when scientists established the importance of mineral salts in human nutrition, these two groups of foods assumed a position of commanding importance, because next to milk and eggs, they are the chief conveyors of minerals from the soil to man.

With the discovery of vitamins they achieved new distinction, because in their content of these vital substances, they rank with milk and eggs as "protective" foods.

Foods That Safeguard Health

In addition to providing nutrients that are indispensable for buoyant health and normal growth, they possess another important virtue: the indigestible cellulose or fiber, which is the framework of the leaves, stems and fruits of plants, has a natural laxative value which helps to insure normal elimination. And finally, they are extremely useful in helping to maintain the acid-base balance of the body, for all vegetables and most fruits yield an alkaline-ash following digestion.

Green Vegetables for Iron
Fruits and vegetables supply varying amounts of practically every mineral element the body requires.

They do not compare with milk as a source of calcium, but substantial amounts of this bone-and-tooth-building substance are to be found in leaf and stem vegetables, carrots, oranges, figs and strawberries. Moreover, investigations have demonstrated that calcium from vegetables is well utilized by adults.

Green vegetables, in general, are outstanding as a source of iron. And it has been further established that their iron is better absorbed and becomes more completely available for nutrition than iron from some other sources. Some fruits are also valued for their iron content, the more notable including oranges; tomatoes, which are botanically a fruit, though they are classed as a vegetable; strawberries, blackberries, raspberries and huckleberries; and dried figs, dates and prunes.

Vegetables for Vitamin A
We usually think of milk and other dairy products as our most important sources of vitamin A. But recently, it has been determined that the thin green leaves of vegetables are also outstanding in this respect. Weight for weight, when fresh, escarole is more than five times as rich as butter. Young green peas and green string beans are also a good source of this vitamin as are tomatoes, carrots, and sweet potatoes.

Sources of Vitamin C
Vitamin C, which is essential for maintaining the health of teeth and gums and for preventing the degeneration of muscle fibers generally, is obtained almost entirely from fruits and vegetables. The principal sources of this vitamin are the citrus fruits; raw and canned tomatoes and canned tomato juice; strawberries; raw carrots, onions and yellow turnips.

As this vitamin is easily destroyed by heat in the presence of oxygen, the amount present in any fruit or vegetable is greatly reduced by the average home cooking methods. On the other hand, this and other vitamins, as well as minerals, are usually well retained in commercially canned fruits and vegetables.

What About Canned Foods?
I frequently receive letters from readers who question the merits of canned foods. They ask whether it is true that canned foods are devoid of vitamins; whether canned foods are wholesome for children; whether or not canned foods may spoil on the grocer's shelves; and if it is dangerous to eat foods that have stood in the can for a few minutes after being opened.

To discount the value of modern canned foods is to display a lack of knowledge as to how these foods are harvested, prepared and packed. And the failure to use them may result in depriving your family of essential minerals and vitamins. There are available in cans today, 46 varieties of vegetables, 33 kinds of fruit, and 10 different juices, besides soups, numerous specialties and several kinds of fish. Every one of these presents a healthful and nutritious food in a form that is often superior to the same foods cooked at home. That is partly because of the methods employed and partly because canned foods are processed at the peak of their flavor and freshness.

A Superlative Canned Food

An outstanding example is canned salmon which has been called by one of America's leading food experts, "the cheapest and most nutritious animal food that can be had for children over six."

Very little fresh salmon finds its way into our markets and even then it may be far from "fresh" after a considerable journey packed in ice. On the other hand, salmon canneries have been established in close proximity to the waters from which salmon are taken, so that only a few hours elapse between the time the fish are removed from the water and the moment their rich nourishment is sealed in cans.

Similarly the fruits and vegetables designed for canning are allowed to mature on tree or vine. This means that they develop maximum flavor and vitamin content. Then they are picked, rushed to nearby canneries and hermetically sealed in cans. The sealed cans are then cooked at high heat so as to destroy any bacteria which might be present. Because they are protected from the air during the cooking process, and because the cooking liquors are sealed in the cans, they retain a maximum amount of minerals and vitamins. It is because canned foods are so definitely superior in this respect that physicians encouraged the canning of strained fruits and vegetables for infants and young children.

Fallacies Disproved

Canned foods will keep indefinitely without spoilage, as long as nothing occurs to make the can leak. It is not necessary to remove canned food from the container as soon as the tin is opened, though many homemakers often do so because the food presents a more attractive appearance in a dish or bowl. A hissing sound when opening does not mean that the contents of a can are spoiled, but rather that there was a vacuum in the can, which the air is rushing in to fill.

Thus canned fruits and vegetables are not only "as good as" fresh ones, but are often superior in food values. Every homemaker should see to it that she uses both liberally in the diet of every member of her family, as a means of providing liberal amounts of minerals and vitamins.

Questions Answered

Mrs. A. B. M.—There is not the slightest reason why a normal person should not drink coffee after middle age unless the beverage has been expressly forbidden by a doctor. On the contrary, many people find both coffee and tea extremely comforting in their later years.
